

Parent, Pupil and Learner Voice Newsletter

WINTER EDITION

Thank you for being a part of Parent, Pupil and Learner Voice

Here are a few reasons why you taking part in the Parent, Pupil and Learner Voice is so important.

You are contributing to vital education research

This research is vital to the Department for Education because it provides regular, fast information to those who make decisions about education in England.

What you think is important

Having parent, pupils and learner voices included in research increases the accuracy of the data and its power to inform policy making.

The survey has impact!

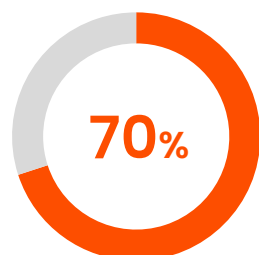

Last year we asked parents about childcare for before and after school. The Head of Wraparound Childcare Unit told us that the information from the Parent, Pupil and Voice made a substantial contribution to the Department for Education's case to fund the new Wraparound Childcare Programme. The findings were even mentioned in a budget speech in the House of Commons.

Spotlight - do pupils enjoy going to school?

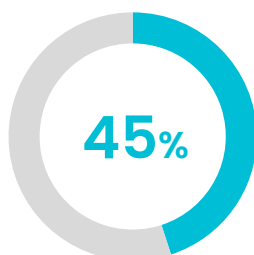

Parents and pupils were asked about how enjoyable attending school was.

Parents and pupils told us different things. Most parents said their children had enjoyed going to school every day or most days, but less than half of pupils said the same.*

*The respondents to the parents and pupils surveys may not have come from the same household.

Parents of secondary school pupils said their children enjoyed going to school every day or most days.

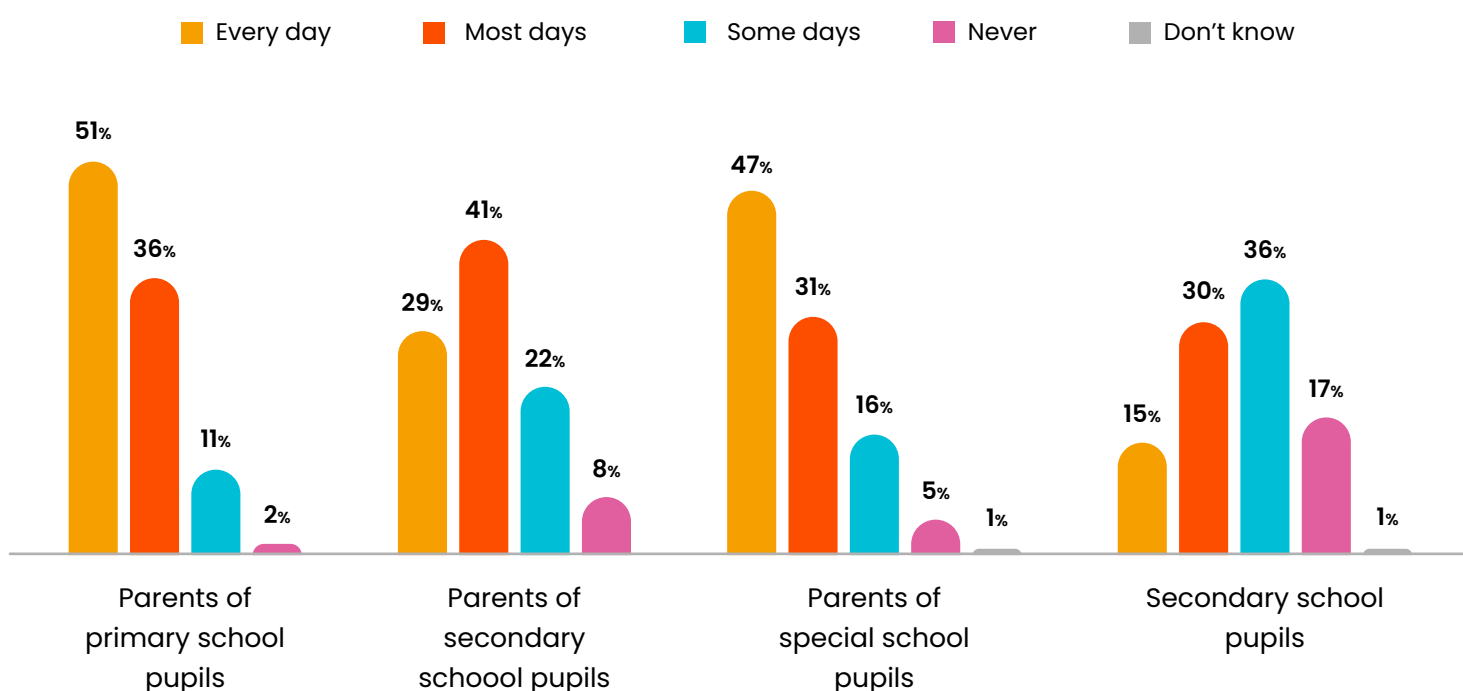

Parents of Year 7 to 11 pupils told us that they had enjoyed going to school every day or most days in the past week.

The chart below shows us in more detail what parents and pupils told us. If you would like to have a look at the more detailed published findings, these can be found here:

How often pupils enjoyed going to school over the past week

If this difference of opinion is something you want to talk about and if you feel like you'd like a bit more support then there are lots of resources available. A good place to start is the Every Mind Matters website - www.nhs.uk/every-mind-matters/

How does Parent, Pupil and Learner Voice work?

Here is how your views are turned into information which helps the Department for Education make decisions for education in England:

Upcoming surveys

We will invite you to more short surveys in the coming months by email and text message. The next survey will be in December 2024.
